Please name a few people to conduct the surprise inspection. When I talked to [redacted] I got the idea that we could supplement regular inspection with surprise inspection aimed at a limited list of checks. How many people do we need for that.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Deputy Director for Administration

FROM:

Deputy Director for Science and Technology

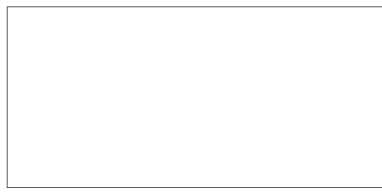

SUBJECT: Unannounced Oversight Inspections at Agency
Contractor (Communications) Facilities

REFERENCE: OIT-9681-88, dtd 5 Aug 88; Same Subject

Rae
1. Thanks for passing along the referent memo from the Director of OIT on unannounced inspections of contractors' communications facilities. As I indicated during our discussion in June, the concept of allowing such unannounced inspections is one I believe merits consideration.

2. The proposals outlined in the referent memo, issued subsequent to our meeting, are basically sensible, straightforward, and worth pursuing. However, while I basically agree with the thrust of the memo, I am concerned over just how many "oversight inspectors" we are talking about. Obvious security concerns should dictate that the number of "cleared and badged" inspectors allowed access to contractors' communications facilities be limited to the fewest necessary to conduct a spot check. If the number of inspectors is kept to the minimum, then such unannounced inspections will be doable.

3. As such unannounced inspections would take place at facilities of contractors with whom we have vast working relationships, I am following this issue closely. Please do not hesitate to call on me if I can be of any further assistance in this matter.
